Biography

In 1983, Toledo, Ohio witnessed the birth of Jeremy Aldrich. It is here that he has spent the majority of his life. While attending elementary school his parents moved him to the suburbs not far from his home town. After completing high school and a few years of college, he decided to move back to Toledo to start his life.

Jeremy was artistically influenced by his cousin, Brian Huhn, a metalsmith from Toledo, at an early age and began drawing comic book figures. He then moved on to a more serious approach to artwork, in which his own style began to take shape. Though Jeremy has achieved his own style and artistic skills other than metalsmithing, he is still influenced by his cousin and lifetime friend.

Another major influence in Jeremy’s life as well as his artwork is his father, Gary Aldrich. Jeremy was introduced to computers at an early age due to his father’s career working for various networking and software firms. This allowed him to become extremely well versed in the use of a computer. However, Jeremy had to decide between a life as an artist or to follow in his father’s footsteps and become a programmer.

In his junior year attending Anthony Wayne High School he realized, with a little help from his art teacher, that he could combine his computer skills with his artistic ability and pursue a career in digital art. From that point forward, he began creating digital works, concentrating his efforts on mastering the programs he would need to achieve his goal as a professional digital artist.

Jeremy Aldrich currently resides in Toledo, Ohio with his fiancé, Mystel. He is still greatly influenced by his cousin and his father, though he draws most of his ideas from life around him. Jeremy works full-time in order to finish college and receive his Bachelor of Fine Art in 2005. He plans to continue to create art for the rest of his life and hopes that he can influence others to do the same.